Dear friends:

I am a homeschooling mom, just like you. My name is Betsy and my husband and I started homeschooling when our daughter was young. It worked so well for our family, that we really wanted to continue on through high school.

But, frankly, we were intimidated. How would I teach science and math, when I didn't remember them from my high school years? Most of my friends were putting their teens into government high schools, but we didn't want to do that, at all. So we began our searching for resources.

We found great homeschool high school curriculum and found that doing high school was really not that much different than the younger years. We just needed to be mindful of the important details for homeschooling high school. Four years later, we graduated our daughter from BJ's Homeschool, where I blog.

I now am a retired homeschool mom of a college grad. And I feel a calling from God to reach out and offer support and encouragement to the families who come after me. Because we are so glad that we homeschooled through high school! That's why I offer resources, like my ebook and, this video workshop and workshop outline below.

I hope you enjoy it. I also invite you to download the 10+ page PDF - How to Homeschool High School, as it covers many of the same topics, in greater detail.

Making Your Teen's Transcripts

Homeschool transcripts are just the record of what your teen learned and studied in high school. It is usually one page, and it includes all the courses your teen did, with the credits and the grades earned. Many more details are on my Transcripts Freebie PDF, here at SPED Homeschool.

Assigning High School Credit

There are 3 easy ways to assign high school credit:

1. The Textbook Method
2. The Hours Method
3. The Mastery Method

Choosing Your High School Curriculum

My favorite resources for finding frugal quality high school curriculum are:

1. Let's Homeschool High School
2. The Curriculum Choice
3. To give you more ideas, our favorite curriculum is listed in my ebook, which is free to read on Amazon Prime.

We as homeschoolers can tailor our teen's studies to what they need. For special education teens, you can teach them the things that will help them after they finish their high school years. For college bound, do the entrance requirements.

High School Electives

Activities like youth group, girl scouts, doing bible quiz competitions can all become high school electives.

Doing electives allow your teen time to delve into their interests and learn new skills, and find their God given gifts.

I have a list of 100 high school electives which you and your teen can browse through, in my ebook.

I invite you to download my PDF called How to Homeschool High School. It covers assigning credit and planning your high school for your teen. To find it on SPED Homeschool, just look for this cover photo below.
